

Frankies was owned and operated by Franklin Brook during the early 50's up to the 80's. It was one of "The Local Bars " where mostly working people went and a few politicians. Frankie was a quiet man who spoke very little to his customers, but had a no nonsense rule. It was a place to visit, have some liquid refreshments and a boiled egg or two and dance to the "Oldies".

It was where ,Hunters,Truckers, and Hard working men gathers to speak in their own language and sometimes discuss other things in a louder fashion then usual. I don't believe he had a phone, which saved the "shirttails" of many of attached men. But , it was also a place where lots of political decisions were made in the after hours. So they say!

For some it was the first stop on the way home from a hard days work or the last one. But, always a fun one. There are many living today that have memories they would or would not like to share.
